It is a much needed book for seminarian, clergy and people in helping profession. It provide insights that help one to understand how the harmful effect which are hidden but actively working in one's unconscious level affecting one behavior. Its observion of pschological-harmed people enter into helping profession and their harmful behavior are insightful.

I am a hospice chaplain and found this book to be immensely wise and practical. It is a fusion of the usefulness of psychology and its applicability to spiritual care both as background and diagnosis of ourselves as clergy. We (human beings) are all dented cans (my words); we are all wounded. This book speaks to the necessity of if we are to support others, we must first be aware of our own wounding. ... I found it immensely helpful. I bought it used...and yes mine fell apart too but I got it a nifty spiral binder and it was better than original. This is metaphor for this book. We healers must find a way to heal outselves...then the idea of Thorton Wilder applied... "In loves service only the wounded may serve."

I bought this book with the intent on helping me to navigate through the clergy world with less bumps and bruises by harmful clergy. While it provided me the things to watch out for among those who might have the potential of being harmful it also helped me to reflect on my own ways of being harmful to myself and others. Very much a CPE type book and a welcome addition to my shelves.
