The Christian College Coalition has developed a new supplemental textbook series intended to examine presuppositions and to focus on issues and questions in various disciplines of the liberal arts curriculum when introductory level students approach their studies from a Christian perspective. Those of us in psychology can only be honored that they choose the topic of psychology for their first publication in the series, and Harper & Row sent a complimentary copy to every psychology faculty member in the coalition. Myers and Jeeves' little volume does exactly what it has set out to do. They survey the field of psychology as an introductory text would and attempt to integrate the Christian faith at every point. They take a perspectivalist, levels of analysis view of integration throughout. For the authors, psychology is filtered through the eyes of faith. Each chapter is 5-8 page-long, enough to stimulate but not bore the college freshman. The book is not full of footnotes that might distract the reader from its flowing content, but fully documented. The authors, especially Myers who has himself written an introductory college text, have a comprehensive grasp of the field. Each chapter is warmly and sensitively written, highly relevant to student lives and contemporary Christian issues. It is a deeply Christian book, well-balanced in every respect. It is packed full of illustrative examples at every point and very enjoyable to read. Each chapter concludes with excellent sources for further reading. Every Christian introductory psychology course should use this volume as their supplementary text.

David G. Myers (born 1942) is a professor of psychology at Hope College; he has written/cowritten many books, such as The human puzzle: Psychological research and Christian belief, The inflated self, Psychology Through the Eyes of Faith, Psychology & Christianity, What God Has Joined Together: The Christian Case for Gay Marriage, etc. Malcolm Jeeves is a psychology professor who has also written books such as Psychology & Christianity: The view both ways. [NOTE: page numbers below refer to the 224-page 1987 edition.] They wrote in the Foreword of this 1987 book, "It is the conviction of the authors... that although psychology and Christianity are profoundly different, yet they interact... It is our conviction ...
