Customer Reviews

Kazlyn is too busy with school to worry about boys but when she runs into (literally) the star on the basketball team Tyrese Hamilton she doesn't know what to think. He is even more shocked when she won't even give him the time of day. Tyrese decides that she is a challenge he would like to take on so he kind of follows her around and wait for her outside her classes. As they start to form a friendship they both realize their might just be something else there. What at first seems like an unlikely match turns out to be a very heartwarming story where they are able to save each other!

And to top it off there is basketball and romance! Two of my favorite things! Here is an excerpt from the beginning of the book that is sure to get you hooked like I was: Shivering in the vicious canyon breeze, Kazlyn skirted a group of slow-moving girls and ran directly into the back of an insanely tall guy. Her bag flung from her fingers and books scattered in the crusty snow piled up next to the sidewalk. "Snot!" Tall dude turned and gave her a friendly smile. "No, it's Tyrese." His smile grew as he looked her over, white teeth flashing against his smooth, dark skin. "Most people call me Ty, but you can call me anything you want to." "Ugh!" She ignored his flirtations and pretty-boy face. You'd think a man that large would have a face like Andre the Giant. Grabbing at books, she shoved them into her bag. "Here, let me get that for you." Ty reached farther across the snow bank than she could; with octopus arms it was probably easy. "Thanks," she muttered. He retrieved a few more books and her peppermint lip gloss. Of course, he would find the only feminine thing she had time for during school. His grin got even bigger.
