Synopsis

When two people have walked through fire, can love bring the healing and help they need? Spurned by love, Lady Margaux Winslow, daughter of the Marquess of Ashbury, has no use for the other eligible gentlemen of London. Despite her beauty, her sharp tongue soon earns her a reputation as a dragon. Convincing her parents to let her retreat to their Scottish estate, a home for abandoned young women, Margaux feels she can do something meaningful with her life. At their wits' end, her parents believe a few months in seclusion will teach her to appreciate her privileged existence, and accept the next gentleman of worth who offers for her. Margaux has no plans to yield. But neither she nor her parents bargain for the proximity of the gorgeous, blue-eyed Scotsman on the neighbouring estate. Gavin Craig, content with his life as a country doctor, is unexpectedly thrust into the world of aristocratic society after the accidental deaths of his brother and nephews. With all the duties his new title entails, and his adoption of three orphans, Gavin desperately needs a wife. She should preferably be a lady, trained since birth to manage a noble house, servants and family. His former disdain for a marriage of convenience has been rapidly overcome by the colossal task of learning to run a large Scottish barony. One lovely candidate is right next door — except that she's inexplicably determined to be a spinster.

The second son of a Scottish laird, Dr. Gavin Craig chose to live his life as a country doctor in rolling hills of Scotland. He served his country as a military doctor patching his countrymen when Wellington marched. Now, with the war behind him, and his life settled into a pleasant hum, he had the respect of the community and the satisfaction his job. He looked forward to good things that life could offer him. And now he holds a letter in his hands that totally upends his life. His brother and his entire family – his wife and their three sons- were all killed when their carriage slipped down the side of a cliff. His heart, his life, all shattered. He will never see his brother again, nor see his nephews grow into the fine men that he knew they would be. How had that happened? His life as a simple country doctor was at an end. He was now a Scottish laird, the laird of his family home. He has to leave this life he made for himself, the one he loves and return to Castle Craig – to a life he knows nothing about, and is unsure about. However, before he leaves, decides he wants a family. The three children at the orphanage who have come to love him – and he them – Gavin cannot leave them. He hopes that they will agree to be his family, thinking that with their love and help, the halls of Castle Craig might not be so hollow and lonely. Lady Margaux Ashbury, one of the identical, beautiful exotic looking Ashbury triplets is done with the seasons – big or little. She is tired of the marriage mart. She felt no connection with any suitor. Years ago her heart had found love and then, too quickly lost that love. She would only marry for love, and knew love would be a rare find in her world. She wants to join a convent, but her parents staunchly refused.
